2. The Auctioneer reserves the right to reject any bid which is merely a nominal or fractionad advance, and therefore, in his judgment, likely to affect the Sale injuriously.

7. Upon failure to comply with the above conditions, the money deposited in part payment shall be forfeited; all Lots uncleared within one day from conclusion of Sale (unless otherwise specified as above) shall be re-sold by public or private sale, without further notice, and the deficiency (if any) attending such re-sale shall be made good by the defaulter at this Sale, together with all charges attending the same. This Condition is without prejudice to the right of the Auctioneer to enforce the contract made at this Sale, without such re-sale, if he thinks fit.

8. The Undersigned are in no manner connected with the business of the cartage or packing and shipping of purchases, and although they will afford to purchasers every facility for employing careful carriers and packers, they will not hold themselves responsible for the acts and charges of the parties engaged for such services.

141—VERY OLD AND RARE ALABASTER GROUP

Kwannon with two disciples. The following description is by the late Professor Fenollosa: "Statuette group, carved apparently in alabaster. Chinese; probably Fifth Century. Subject, The Buddhist deity, Kwan-yin (Japanese, Kwannon), seated in contemplation, with two standing disciples. About 15 inches in height, including base. The statues have become stained by incense smoke to the color of bronze. This group is unique, in that it forms a Kwannon trinity. The type of the central figure is well known in very early Chinese, Korean and Japanese bronzes. The charming attitude of resting the head upon the right hand, the elbow on the right knee, and the right leg crossed upon the left knee, is typically rendered in the large Chuguji Kwannon near Mara. Carved by Prince Shotoku, about the year 600. The curve lines of the composition are very beautiful, the flying drapery at the side serving to give stability to the two standing figures. This is the style of early Buddhist art in China that belongs to the 'Six Dynasties,' fourth, fifth and sixth centuries. From style alone it might seem to date from the great Liang Dynasty, about 450. The inscription on the base, partly legible, gives the date as 'Tempo 10th,' of Northern Tsi Dynasty, which is the year 559 A. D. It is to be hoped that this very rare piece, so important for the history of early Chinese art, may remain in this country. The names of the two carvers, Manken and Dojitsu (Japanese pronunciation), occur in the inscription. . . ." Has carved teakwood stand.

SECOND AFTERNOON'S SALE

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 4TH, 1910

AT THE AMERICAN ART GALLERIES

BEGINNING AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

GREEK GLASS

TANAGRA FIGURINES, SINGLE AND IN GROUPS

ROMAN AND EGYPTIAN ANTIQUITIES.

179—THREE PIECES ANCIENT GLASS

7.00 "Tear bottles," these little bits of iridescent glass used to be called, but it is now thought they held cosmetics for the complexion.

180—THREE PIECES, TOILETTE PHIALS

10.00 Slender bottles, used by the old Syrians for the toilette, and buried with corpses to help them "keep up appearances" in the under-world.

181—TWO PIECES, UNGUENT BOTTLES

6.00 Handles and a spiral relief mark one of these little tomb ornaments. These pieces have not changed in tone as much as usual —nearer the color of the old Phoenician glass.

182—TWO PIECES, ANCIENT GLASS BOTTLES

11.00 The shapes of these bottles show that the forms imitated by the glass-blowers were skin bottles, not wooden or horn receptacles, or perhaps little bladders.

183—DECORATED UNGUENT HOLDER

Mr. Chester

5.00 This little vase is interesting, as it shows how the glass-blower first curled a decoration round the neck and tip, and then annealed the hollow handles.

184—GLASS BOTTLE FOR OIL

In this piece, touched here and there with fine iridescent highlights, one sees the impression of the glass-blower's hand as he flattened the four sides.

6.00 185—TWO PIECES, FLOWER HOLDER AND OINOCHOE

The taller vaselet is a shape very much copied in modern times for flower-holders. The other is a graceful classic form used on a larger scale for pouring wine.

186—TWO PIECES, SMALL JUG AND FLOWER HOLDER

6.00 Charming little jug of delicately iridized glass, having a raised spiral decoration. Observe how deftly the workman has pinched the tips to form a spout. Small piece full of style. Companion piece is a brilliant bit of rainbow iridescence.

9.00 187—TWO PIECES, FLOWER HOLDERS

Mrs. G. R. Pur
Na. Samuels

The salts of the earth, acting on the soft glass used by the Syrian glass-blowers, have transformed one of these tall flower-holders into a glow of color. The other piece seems struck by moon-beams—a very unusual note in this tomb glass!

188—GLASS BOTTLE FOR PASTY MATERIAL

5.00 Hand bottle for some pasty substance perhaps used for the complexion. The wide flare of the neck is a provision for carrying it, under a thick soft collar, for suspension to the belt. Uncommon shape.

189—GLASS JAR FOR TOMB

Mr. Chester

A fine cloud of iridescence covers this small jar in almost every part. It is rare that the entire surface is so evenly affected by the oxidizing of the glass.

6.00 190—VASE OF DELICATELY COLORED GLASS

Portions of this broad-bottomed vaselet are brilliant with lavender, purple and blue, the surface being irregularly affected by the play of colors.

Mrs. G. R. Pieri

191—GLASS VASELET FOR COSMETICS

Pretty little broad-shouldered vase, from whose surface the brown skin laid on it by age has been removed, revealing the lovely opal tints of a polished seashell.

13.00 192—SMALL GLASS JAR WITH CAMEO EFFECTS

This ornate little jar has been curiously affected. Under the creamy layer is a field of darker glass full of gleaming opaline tints. Large areas turn from lilac to green as the jar is shifted so as to catch different lights.

6.00 193—GLASS SUSPENSION JAR FOR UNGUENTS

Double unguent jar with glass handle for suspension. One side contains the wooden spatula by which the sticky mass was extracted. Mounted on black wooden stand.

194—GLASS TOMB VASELET

Very thin, delicately blown vaselet, with a large part of the dark outer skin, formed by centuries of dwelling in the tomb, removed, so as to lay bare tracts of finely opalescent glass.

14.00 195—PEACOCK GLASS BOTTLE

This bottle, after its seclusion of a couple of thousand years, shines like the neck of a peacock, the bird of Juno. The gleam of green and gold changes as one moves the piece.

6.00 196—TWO PIECES, GLASS FLOWER HOLDERS

In one of these tall flower-holders the flow of the molten glass is revealed by the lines of iridescence. The glass-blower never imagined that age would make his work beautiful to such a degree. The larger vase has an entirely different color-scheme—less of dark greens, more of rose and lilac.

Mrs. Cook

A. Kayatt

197—TWO PIECES, VASELETS FOR THE USE OF THE DEAD

5-00 A fine bit of form and color is the pitcher-shaped piece in this lot of two. It has a very peculiar russet tone, and the glass-man has lavished ornament on lip and neck. The other piece is like the oldest Phoenician glass in tone.

198—GLASS SUSPENSION JAR FOR TOMB

10.00 Elaborate double "tear-bottle," as these little affairs were once called. It has never had a handle, but was suspended by a soft cord running round the neck. Sides decorated with a snake effect of glass, the jaws of the serpent clutching the brim. The serpent was sacred to the Gods of Healing—Apollo, Mercury, Aesculapius, etc.

199—FOUR-FOLD COSMETIC GLASS FOR SUSPENSION

10.00 Quadruple unguent-holder of old green glass, decorated with fine bands of relief and provided with four handles. Observe how the glass of the four phials, while still soft, was pushed together and adhered; the glass-man finished the foot in one solid mass. Rare, and unusual in shape. A museum piece.

200—OIL BOTTLE FOR THE USE OF GHOSTS

Bottle of extremely thin glass, having a practical, well-made handle. Meant for oil or some fluid of similar consistency. The ancients thought that the dead required most things that are needed in life.

Mrs. G. R. Pur

201—WINE HOLDER FOR THE INHABITANT OF THE TOMB

18.00 Fine large bottle in very light glass, suitable for water or wine. Such bottles formed part of the furniture of a tomb, along with big pottery jars and little receptacles for honey, dates, milk, meal and cosmetics for the skin. Some tombs show a regular "battery of the kitchen and toilette."

TANAGRA FIGURINES

202—CUPID RIDING ON A SWAN

6.00
The ancients liked to think of their great god Zeus visiting the earth on adventures, and unconsciously pushed into them by his young friend Eros. Here we have the Swan that concealed the form of the Thunder God when he fell in love with Leda, who became the mother of Castor and Pollux, and Helen of Troy.

203—EROS IN FLIGHT. FIGURINE FOR SUSPENSION

30.00
Airy and well-modelled figurine of the Tanagra variety. A small Genius or a Cupid, wearing a scanty cloak, a diadem and a pair of traveller's boots. The head inclines prettily to one side, wings are expanded and toes pointed in flight. The figurine belongs to the kind that were suspended on nails, either in a family chapel or in the tomb. One arm broken. Note remains of color.

204—FAMILIAR SCENE. PAN HONORED BY WORSHIPERS OF BACCHUS

12.50
Bacchanalian scene. In this very small Tanagra group a devotee of Bacchus has reeled up to a terminal shaft which bears the head of Pan, and embracing it, is about to place a garland on its head. Remains of color on the hair of the two heads. Exhilarated expression on the face of the reveller.

205—CUPID FLYING THROUGH THE AIR

30.00
In this little Tanagra the figure is designed for suspension by a cord or on a nail. Rather unusual are the heavy, curling tresses almost like a wig, on which the original color lingers. One arm under the wrap, the other extended in greeting.

206—FIGURINE FOR SUSPENSION. FLYING GENIUS OR GANYMEDE

25.00
This flying figure may be of Ganymede after his translation to Olympus, whence the Phrygian cap. Remarkable bold management of the folds of the cloak. Effeminate modelling of limbs, more womanly than masculine.

207—YOUNG GENIUS FLYING WITH LYRE

Mrs. Geo. L. Bliss

The long, wig-like hair retains a good deal of the original color, remains of which will also be found on the cloak. Assured, lively action. Self-confidence, superciliousness have been expressed very well by the sculptor in this little floating figure.

35.00 208—APHRODITE, AMPHITRITE, THETIS OR GALATEA

Mrs. Payne Whitney

This half-length figurine might be one of half a dozen goddesses connected with the sea. She is backed against and partly enclosed by the valves of a scallop shell. A shell-like background sets her off, and below are coral and other marine growths. Figurine for family shrine or the tomb.

32.00 209—CHIRON INSTRUCTING THE BOY ACHILLES

Mary Garden

According to Greek tradition, Achilles was sent as a boy to be taught by the Centaur Chiron. This figurine shows the boy riding on his teacher's back while Chiron instructs him in music. The lyre, which originally was between the Centaur's uplifted hands, has disappeared.

Height, 6 inches.

210—THETIS WITH THE HELMET OF ACHILLES

M. Daniels

17.00 The sea goddess, wife of Peleus, is carrying from Vulcan the new armor made for her son Achilles. As she knows he is to fall, she regards the helmet with sorrow. The dolphin on which she rides is the kind one sees in Greek sculpture, but exaggerated as to beak and crest, the tail ending in a three-pointed, leaf-like fluke.

32.00 211—APHRODITE AT HER TOILETTE

Mary Garden

Backed by open scallop shells, and standing in the rocky margin of the sea, Venus is shown arranging her locks, having placed her diadem in position. Fine nude modelling, pleasing expression of face. Statuette for shrine and tomb.

212—PRESENTATION OF THE BRIDE

A. Kayatt

15.00
Tanagra group. A small Cupid flying has removed the mantle from a young woman who is kneeling, having a cup in one hand and something to eat in the other. Refers to marriage ceremonies. Arranged for standing on table or hanging on peg in wall. This might be a gift to a bride or bridegroom.

213—NEPTUNE DRIVING AND HURLING HIS TRIDENT

M. Samuels

20.00
Important group in the Tanagra fashion. On a chariot formed of a great shell, drawn by two horses with dolphin-like hindquarters, Neptune stands in a commanding attitude. The right hand is supposed to hold reins, the left his trident. Perhaps neither reins nor trident were ever supplied. Curious modelling of the waves and the fan-shaped tails of the sea-horses.

214—SILENUS AND HIS ASS

Mary Garden

17.00
The elderly attendant on Bacchus, with ivy in his hair and a cluster of grapes in his hand, is half sitting, half lolling, on the back of his faithful Ass, which is lying down. His only garment is a goat-skin. Remains of pink coloring. Silenus, an old god of the moon, has always the features of the barbarians whom the Greeks, when they took Greece, drove into the hills, or enslaved. He has the Satyr type of face, but not goat's legs. Rollicking, inebriated action well expressed. The ass's ears are gone.

215—LADY WITH IVY WREATH AND FAN

Mary Garden

17.00
Tanagra figurine of a well-known type, but remarkable for the drapery, which is complicated and extremely well modelled. Colors linger on hair, pupils, ivy leaves, etc. Torso and limbs are indicated under the thin coverings. The lady is thoughtful as she moves slowly toward or from some festival in honor of Bacchus.

216—LADY WITH CARVED HEAD, HOLDING HER FAN

15.70

Graceful, suspended movement; fine lines of drapery. These figurines are very useful to students of the Greek past, because they imitate the local garments of the time and realize the people as they were. The lady, with a long, round, columnar neck, is moving very slowly and with dignity. Her covered head may mean that she is a priestess. Such a figurine would be placed in a lady's tomb.

217—MAIDEN WITH DISTAFF AND BALL OF YARN

b

50.70

A very lovely combination of lines and curves is found in these single Tanagra figurines. The slope of the limbs, the bend of the head, the natural movement of the arms, are extremely graceful. Remarkably beautiful piece, chaste and ladylike. Note the extraordinary beauty of the drapery.

218—BACCHUS, ARIADNE AND ATTENDANT

Mrs. S. J. C. Bishop

70.70

The poetry of wine-bibing among the ancient Greeks. While this group would be used for any worshipper of Bacchus to grace the shrine or tomb, the figures would be understood to apply to the god himself and to Ariadne, whom he found on Naxos. The small figures are youthful geniuses in the god's train. The youth who supports Bacchus on the other side wears the goat-skin often worn by Silenus. Gay, lively and well expressed group, each figure being alive, the whole group expressing the exhilarating quality of wine.

219—MERCURY CONDUCTING A SOUL TO THE STYX

Mrs. Birmingham

42.50

Elaborate group showing the god Mercury, "conductor of souls," arriving at the Styx in charge of a beautiful woman. She seems to be alive, not a spectre, for Charon appears to be objecting to take her aboard. Mercury and his female companion have the gestures and expression of command. Background of sedges. Good action, broad but expressive modelling. A very familiar composition in Greek and Roman sculpture.

220—PLACQUE IN LOW-RELIEF

15.50

Battle of Theseus with the Amazons. Fine composition of many figures of men and women and horses. On the left, a lonely man in a biga (two-horse chariot) is urging on his steed, and trampling down a fallen Amazon who raises her shield. On the right, another Amazon, stricken by Theseus, is falling from her horse into the arms of a comrade. Below, a dying man. Above, in the centre, is Theseus, standing by the elderly man in the chariot. He turns and sends his spear into the Amazon on horseback.

253—RARE ANCIENT BRONZE STATUETTE

The "Goddess Fortuna Panthea." It was found in Syria at the ruins of the ancient city Anteratus, on the coast of the Mediterranean north of Beyrouth. Anteratus was distinguished for its wealthy citizens of Greeks and Romans, being one of the summer resorts in that part of the country. The goddess Fortuna brought fortune to the possessors. She wore the attributes of the different deities. The serpent on her right arm is the attribute of Hygiea. On her left arm is the Cornucopia, surmounted by the bust of Jupiter, which means abundance. On her back are the wings of Eros and the quiver of Diana. On her head she bears the crown of Isis of Egypt. On her dress is the bronze mirror, an attribute of Venus. In her right hand the goddess originally held a rudder, an attribute of Neptune, but it is missing. The bronze belongs to the Second Century A. D. It is one of the best-preserved statuettes of its type known. The word "Panthea" means "sacred to the gods." Has glass shade and black wood stand.

By his genius, but especially by the charm and ascendancy of his virtue, he was destined to organize the temporal power of the Popes, to develop and regulate their spiritual sovereignty, to found their paternal supremacy over the new-born crowns and races which were to become the great nations of the future and to be called France, Spain and England. It was he who inaugurated in the Middle Ages modern society and Christian civilization. He established in his palace on the Coelian Hill at Rome a convent dedicated to St. Andrew, into which he introduced the Benedictine rule and himself became a monk in 575, and was elected Pope in 590. Three times he kissed the lowest steps of the Scala Santa, and then returned to die in the Vatican on May 1st, 1572, at the age of sixty-eight, having governed the Church six years and almost four months. in tones of dove-gray, silvery white and delicate pink, lavender, crushed strawberry and cool and yellow greens, sheds a soft opalescent sheen. Its design, involving a left and right repeat, consists of a system of scroll-work, issuing from the centre and spreading over the whole field. Growing out of the acanthus volutes are sprays of natural leaves interspersed with realistic tulips, anemones, and roses of old pink hue—flowers that are sacred to the Virgin. Some of the spaces enclosed by the volutes are filled with a diagonal interlace of silk thread. The whole is edged with silver galloon.

453—MAGNIFICENT EMBROIDERED ALTAR FRONTAL

510-50
Spanish; Seventeenth Century. The ground is of crimson Genoese velvet, edged along the base and two-thirds up the sides with narrow gold fringe. It is embellished with a quasi-architectural design in high-relief, executed with silver thread. Six pilasters, connected at the top by a cornice, divide the field into five panels: a large central one, and, on each side of it, a narrow one, flanked by a broader. The last, on left and right, contains an arch, supported on Byzantine columns, in the half-round. Within it is an arrangement like a Renaissance window—a balustrade, from which spring side columns supporting an arch, surmounted by a pediment. Inside the frame thus formed appears a vase with a spray of seven-petaled flowers. The two narrower panels contain a somewhat similar design, but its opening is filled with a diagonal lattice-work. Below this is an arch in perspective. The arch in the central panel is also shown in perspective, springing on each side from two columns, between which is represented the tiling of a floor. From the under side of the arch hang festooned sprays, sprinkled with eight-petaled flowers, beneath which is a decorated cartouche. Its crimson field is divided by a blue chevron, the upper part bearing two gold stars; the lower, one. Gold cartouches also embellish the bases of all the pilasters.

Height, 3 feet 3 inches; length, 6 feet 10 inches.

Philip Dexter

The entire field is enriched and encrusted with silver thread, applied in various stitches, on which the ornament is raised in varying relief. It is bordered at the top with a narrow interlace of wave-forms, executed in the half-round and enclosing circles that are filled in with jewel-like spots of crimson, salmon and pale blue silk. The bottom terminates in a silver fringe. The central embellishment is the monogram of the Virgin, "M. A.," interlaced beneath a crown that is decorated with a fleur-de-lis. This is wrought in gold thread, raised and ribbed. Below it are roses in crimson and grey-salmon and cream silk. On each side of it appears a conventionalized peacock, and surmounting the crown are two magnificent Turk's-head lilies in crimson, fawn and cream silk, with a bird on the stem of each. These details establish the motive for the rest of the decoration that spreads over the whole field. It consists of scrolls, sometimes bluish, sometimes yellow, out of which grow in magnificent profusion conventionalized Turks'-heads and lilies, that blend a rich dull claret-color with the hues already mentioned. Here and there appears a bird—a goldfinch and a bullfinch being distinguishable among them.

Height, 3 feet; length, 8 feet 4 inches.

455—EXTRAORDINARY ITALIAN RENAISSANCE EMBROIDERIES, CONSISTING OF TWO COPE HOODS AND THREE SETS OF ORPHREYS

The ground of all these pieces is wrought in gold thread, through which the colored silks have been drawn to represent the draperies of the figures, while the flesh parts are needle point, the silk in some parts being worn away, so that the painted silk underlay is disclosed. The main colors of the silks are blue, rose, yellow and green, which, blending with the gold, acquire from the latter a shimmer and scintillating splendor. One hood represents "The Annunciation"; a scene of three arches supported on slender columns, the Virgin kneeling at a prayer table, the Angel holding a staff and scroll. Over the latter's head appears a circle, which probably once contained a dove. The other hood displays the Virgin seated between Christ and God the Father, while a dove hovers over the crown which they poise over her head. Christ is represented holding His Cross, while an orb rests on the Father's knee. Behind the figures hangs a dossal, which is surrounded by twelve winged angel-heads, floating in golden clouds. Five panels of an orphrey, connected horizontally. The first contains a picture of "The Visitation." Elizabeth receiving Mary in front of a façade, in the openings of which appear three other figures. The second illustrates "The Annunciation." The Virgin kneels beneath a green and gold canopy, sown with fleur de lis, the dove appearing in glory, with silver rays descending from it, the angel bearing a scroll inscribed "AB(V)E GRACIA PLETA"—"Hail, full of Grace." The third represents "The Immaculate Conception." A dove, similar to the one on the hood, hovers above the head of the Virgin, who with fingers joined at the tips stands above the winged head of a cherub. She is buoyed up by four full length figures of child-angels, two at her feet, two beside her shoulders. The fourth may represent Zacharias and Elizabeth, for a woman dressed like the figure in "The Visitation" is supported on the breast of an old man. To the right appears a boy, possibly John the Baptist, carrying a lamb on his shoulders. The fifth pictures "The Presentation." The High Priest holds the Infant, toward whom the Virgin bows reverently. Joseph stands behind her. A basket containing a dove rests on the ground. A set of three orphreys arranged vertically. The first represents Thomas, the Doubter, kneeling before the risen body of Christ, invited to place his finger in the sacred wounds. The second shows "The Ascension," Christ's figure rising above a line of hills, while eleven disciples and two Marys kneel in the foreground. The third commemorates the "Day of Pentecost," the Virgin being enthroned in the center, the twelve disciples kneeling in a semi-circle, and cloven tongues descending from the dove that hovers above. A set of three orphreys, arranged vertically. The first exhibits the scene of "The Resurrection"—four soldiers asleep round the tomb, on which stands Christ, nude to the waist, with a dull claret-colored drapery floating behind him. The second commemorates the appearance of the Risen Christ to the Magdalene. She is kneeling beneath a grayish yellow canopy as Christ, represented in front of an arche, extends His hand to her. The third recalls the "Visit to Emmaus." Christ carrying a shepherd's crook, has joined himself to the two disciples in their walk, while in the rear is a house, through the upper window of which the three appear at supper.

456—A REMARKABLE SET OF ECCLESIASTICAL EMBROIDERIES OF THE ITALIAN RENAISSANCE, CONSISTING OF ALTAR FRONTAL, CHASUBLE,
TWO DALMATICS AND TWO PANELS

6000.00 Frontal Burgundy
The dalmatics have been taken apart and are shown as front and back and two sleeves, so that the whole set consists of twelve pieces. They are of crimson velvet, for use on festivals of martyrs, embroidered with gold and silver ornament and embellished with handsome picture-subjects. The latter are of unusually elaborate design, introducing many figures, excellently composed, and wrought in brilliant silks, with needle-point on the faces and hands, and details of architecture, executed for the most part in gold and silver. Gold, however, forms the foundation of the whole design, which in consequence is invested with a rich, shimmering glow. The ground of the frontal is embroidered with a diaper of curving lines which enclose conventionalized fleur de lis, while a broad band extends up each side and across the top. This has a foundation of gold thread appliquéd, on which are embroidered alternate panels of foliated scroll-work and drapery festoons and needle pictures. The latter, at the top, comprise a central panel of the Virgin and Child, enthroned beneath a green and yellow canopy, supported on each side by a representation of a bishop kneeling in devotion. The side pictures commemorate the two St. Johns—the Evangelist on the right, with book and eagle, and on the left the Baptist, pointing to a lamb that lies at his feet. The chasuble is embellished with a border of gold and silver embroidery, surrounding a vertical panel, composed of sections of scroll work, alternating with needle pictures. The latter, on the front, represent “The Circumcision” and “The Annunciation.” In the former the High Priest is seen before a table on which the child is being held by an attendant, while the Virgin kneels and Joseph stands behind her. The other subject is treated in the usual way. The back of the chasuble shows three scenes. “The Baptism of Christ” is represented in the first—his figure standing in the water, St. John and an angel appearing on the bank, while the dove hovers above and the Holy Father is seen in the clouds. Next comes “The Presentation in the Temple”—the High Priest attended by another priest, holding the Babe, Mary and Joseph standing to the left, an osier cage of doves lying on the floor. Thirdly is represented “The Flight into Egypt,” the group being shown beside a date palm. The dalmatics are embellished with particularly brilliant specimens of needle pictures, the subjects of which are “The Adoration of the Shepherds,” “Visit of the Magi,” “The Resurrection,” and “The Ascension.” The four arm-pieces depict respectively, a composition of nine figures, in which Christ is washing a disciple’s feet; Christ’s agony in the Garden of Gethsemane, an angel hovering in front of Him with the Cup of Anguish, and Peter and James and John asleep; the visit of the three Marys to the sepulchre, on which sits an angel, and Christ joining Himself to the two disciples on their way to Emmaus. The two separate panel-pieces exhibit, respectively, Christ in His transfiguration, Moses and Elias floating at His side, Peter, James and John watching

457—A SERIES OF PICTURES IN NEEDLEWORK

308.00
This strip commences with boldly designed figures, in which strong red and blue mingle with the verdure tones of the landscape. To this part has been attached a strip, executed in smaller and tighter stitches, and in more delicate colors. Commencing on the left, appear two mounted soldiers. They are preceded by a page carrying the lance of a warrior, in Roman armor, who advances on foot to greet a lady. She comes forward with hand extended to welcome him home. Then follows the other part, in which appear to be depicted the legendary incidents in the life of some lady. The first scene shows two angels flying, as they support a child, while a woman and child watch from the window of a house. Then a lady, in blue over-dress and rose skirt, is seen, standing back to us, gazing up at a vision in the sky of an old man seated amid three kneeling figures. The lady holds by the hand a child. Here occurs a break in the sequence of the design. It is followed by a scene of the lady kneeling before a crucifix, while a dove in glory hovers over her head, and a rudely dressed man hurries toward her. Finally the lady appears in glory, seated on a rainbow that spans a city. A peacock and a fox appear below.

The narrow border is olive-brown, and tones of brown are freely used in the pictures, interspersed with strong blue-greens, blue, orange-red and greenish-yellow, the flesh parts being drab. The strip is not continuous, fragments having been lost, and the restoration sometimes interfering with the correctness of the design. The subjects, commencing from the left, comprise the following: 1, The visit of the shepherds to the stable at Bethlehem. 2, Christ after His resurrection appearing to Mary Magdalene. In this and the next two subjects she is pictured in the brown habit of a Carmelite nun. 3, Christ raising the Magdalene, who holds a flaming heart. 4, The Magdalene supported by the two other Marys in the Carmelite garb, before a erueifix, from the wounds in the hands and heart of which rods deseed to the hands and heart of the penitent. 5, A troop of mounted men, one earrying a banner and one blowing a tuba. 6, An angel with a scroll, "Gloria in Exclsis," appearing to the shepherds. 7, The three magi. The Ethiopian has alighted from his eamel, and is pointing to a star that rests above an inn, from which a signboard extends.

Sixteenth Century. Apparently a seetion of a border, the panel exhibits a female figure, elad in a blue robe with yellow and cream high-lights, which leaves the left breast exposed. She stands within a trellis, on which are perehed two baby forms, one on each side of her bosom. She is crowned with a tiara, and her left leg, seen through the drapery of her dress to the thigh, is bound with a eothurnus. To the left of her feet stands a bird. Below her is a profusion of fruit and flowers, surrounding at the base a vase. The whole is on a cream ground, and involves tones of grayish-green and blue-green, with tints of red and orange and dull snuff-color. The narrow border on each side contains a repeat of a half-rosette, cream color on a ground of snuff, shaded with orange-brown.

Eighteenth Century. This tapestry bears the signature of Sébastien Le Clere, French historical painter, whq was born in 1676 and died in Paris in 1763. It represents the Crucifixion, the body of Christ being shown three-quarters full, facing to the left. It is executed in tones of drab, slightly shaded with reddish brown, and a drapery of cream and drab and brown encircles the waist and floats free of the figure on the right. The head, surrounded by pointed rays of glory, is bowed toward the right and lifted with a heavenward gaze. The Cross, fastened into the ground with a wedge, is of dark brown timber, and bears at the top a scroll, on which all that remains of the inscription "Inri" (Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews) is the letter "R." A burst of creamy light appears in the upper left of the sky, where the sun is shown, partly hidden by bars of dark olive-green cloud. The darkness is continued down through the centre of the sky, until it terminates in a band of light over the horizon, against which are seen the dome, spire and roofs of Jerusalem. The foreground represents broken, sandy ground that dips into a hollow, and is bordered toward the middle distance by a belt of shadowed green. Here on the left rise precipitous hills of dull olive-green and brown, near the foot of which appear three trees, probably suggesting the Garden of Gethsemane. Signed on the wedge: "LE CLERC."

Early Gothic Renaissance. A King on His Throne. Can this be intended to represent the abdication of Charles V. in 1556, when he handed over the imperial crown to his brother Ferdinand? The king is seated on a throne, clad in a loose blue robe, with a jewelled chain hanging round his neck. While he raises one hand, he extends the other to a man who stands before him with arm extended in salute. But for the helmet, which rests upon the ground, his figure is clad cap-a-pie in Græco-Roman armor—shoulder pieces, cuirass, short bluish-green undershirt and greaves, the metal being decorated with rudely hammered arabesques. He wears a sword at his left thigh, and carries in his right hand a martel-de-fer, or horseman's hammer. Behind him stands a man-at-arms, dressed in crimson hose slashed on the thighs, a blue shirt and a double necklace of red beads, and a blue full-sleeved short doublet. At his back appear the head and chest of a man dressed in brown. Two other figures complete the group. Upon the balustrade of the throne, over which a crimson drapery hangs, leans a man in a flat, flapping cap and high ruff, such as may be seen in Holbein's portraits, while seated beside the king is a bald-headed man, clad apparently in ecclesiastical vestments, carrying upon his shoulder a jewelled sword. The canopy of the throne, composed of a Persian carpet, is suspended from two columns—a short one that surmounts the balustrade and a taller one that rises directly from the pavement. They are of porphyry, with rudely carved capitals and shafts that swell out into a bulb-shape, where they join the bases. Byzantine influence is shown in their design, as also in the interlaced border of the king's robe, while the classic influence of the Renaissance appears in the armor. The figures, however, in their character and naturalness are thoroughly German. The border is broad and exceptionally fine, having a ground of bluish black, on which, in hues of green and blue and rose, is an elaborate pattern of leaves, tendrils and bunches of grapes, interspersed with floral arrangements of roses and pansies and daisies. It is interrupted at the bottom by a panel, flanked at each end by a circular medallion, decorated with a bird on a bough. Among the grapes in the top border occurs what seems to be a coiled snake.

Early Sixteenth Century. In the upper right corner appears a cartouche, with an inscription in Flemish Gothic lettering of the Sixteenth Century. It presents an indifferent couplet of hexameter and pentameter verse:

“Curat Josephus famis aditura pericla,
Ut jam prelecta pellere messe queat.”

(“Joseph makes provision against the approaching dangers of hunger, so that he is able to banish them by the harvest that he has already stored in advance.”) The subject, therefore, of this tapestry, which is a portion of a larger picture, may be a highly fanciful apotheosis of Joseph, or of some royal person of the Sixteenth Century under whom a corresponding prosperity had been enjoyed. For not only is the hero, as he sits on a throne to the right of the composition, represented with horns of power growing from his head, but also on the opposite side of the picture appears a centaur playing upon a harp. His body is curiously encased in a corselet, as also is the hero's, the latter's being blue, richly embellished with rose and cream-colored vines and leaves and bunches of grapes. Similarly decorated are the greaves that show beneath a yellow drapery with blue shadows, which lies in heavy folds over his knees and hangs from his right shoulder. In each hand he holds a cornucopia that teems with grapes. A girl is offering him a handsome vase with a high lid. The throne is embellished with a richly wrought Renaissance column. To the left of it a man is kneeling on one knee, facing the centaur, or possibly the altar, which is beside the latter. This man is clad in a blue surcoat, edged with brown fur, over a tight-fitting doublet of grey-cream barred with rose stripes. He holds on his knee, which is encased in crimson hose, a book, while his other hand raises a vase over his head. Two ladies appear behind him.

Height, 7 feet 3 inches; width, 8 feet 4 inches.

Early Sixteenth Century. Two men are seated on the left of the foreground. One is an old, long-bearded counsellor, clad in a luminous buff and fawn-colored mantle; the other a general, with chestnut moustache and beard. He wears a helmet decorated with blue and rose and cream plumes, and a blue cloak brocaded with yellow, fastened by a brooch on his right shoulder. The latter is adorned with a gilded panther head, fitting over an underskirt, the skirt of which consists of gold and rose tabs. Similar colors appear in his greaves. He extends his left arm and points at another warrior, who stands facing him. This man's corselet is also embellished with a panther head on the shoulder, from which depends a cream and fawn-colored cloak. He is holding up one finger of his right hand, and the crowd of men who stand behind him are likewise raising one finger, or in some cases two. The background presents a landscape executed in tones of cream and bluish green, where a dovecot, church and house show among trees, while the distance is occupied by hills, with concentric curves of trees lining their base. The panel is edged at the sides with a narrow band of conventional repeat, but has broad borders at the top and bottom. These involve similar designs, a vase, piled with fruit, surmounting a valance that is suspended by two children. This occurs four times, as pendants to the two central designs. The latter are different. The upper one shows two women seated in front of a building, round the edge of which peers an ass. One woman has her elbow on a table strewn with objects like apples, while the other faces her, holding a short brown staff. The lower central figure displays a young man reclining on a litter, carried by two servants, and followed by a man and woman bearing crowns on their heads.

Height, 11 feet 3 inches; width, 6 feet.

Seventeenth Century. The subject of this tapestry appears to be a "Court of Love," one of those scenes of diversion in Platonic love that amused the leisured fancy of the Renaissance. It is a spot in the country with a distant view of a farm, enclosed by a fence. On the left of the foreground a young girl is enthroned. Behind her hangs a dossal of snuff-color, decorated with blue and cream conventional rosettes, and bordered at the side with pale blue, on which is a running design. The girl is clad in a voluminous robe of pale blue, her head bearing a jewelled circlet and bound in a veil, the ends of which are wrapped round the neck. Around the latter hangs a chain of large links, which, with certain variations of design, is a distinguishing accessory to most of the figures in the group. She is attended on the right by two ladies, one in a dress of rose-color, the other clad in a long yellow-green gown with pale rose and cream sleeves. In front of the "Queen of Love," to her left, kneels a youth in attitude of worship. A pretty young girl kneels beside him, and at the back of the pair is a group of two gentlemen and two ladies. In the immediate front, on their left side, a bearded man, in turban and pale blue cloak, stoops to take the hand of a girl seated on the ground. On the right of the foreground a gentleman in pale yellow-green mantle kneels at the feet of a standing lady dressed in a handsome greenish-yellow robe, with a front panel of crimson and gold embroidery and a long, sleeveless coat of dark green, brocaded in yellow. Behind these two appear other couples in postures of love-making, and a few ladies and gentlemen apparently unattached. The ground is tufted with flowering plants of Gothic character. The ground of the border is dark green, on which appears a flowing design of daisies, crimson roses, pale violet grapes and leaves. It is edged with bands of pale olive and buff.

Height, 8 feet 8 inches; width, 12 feet 6 inches.

Seventeenth Century. A cartouche, placed in the centre of the top border, and cutting into the panel, carries the words, "Historia Titi et Vespasiani." The subject, therefore, illustrates an episode in the career of the Emperor Vespasian and his son Titus, who was left by his father to prosecute the war against the Jews. As a matter of fact, it appears to be an exploit of Titus' that is represented, for the chief figure is that of a young man, and Titus was twenty-nine when he took Jerusalem. He occupies nearly the centre of the composition, mounted on a rearing war-horse. A crimson drapery floats from the young man's shoulders. He wears a silver helmet with gold visor and recumbent panther on the crest, from which spring two white ostrich feathers. He has pulled his horse's head round to leave free play for the spear in his right hand. It is directed against a soldier armed with short sword and round shield, who, with one foot planted on the stern of a fallen horse, is warily awaiting the attack. A dark green and pale yellow drapery across his knees shows beside the crimson saddle-cloth of the dead horse. Meanwhile the young hero is being threatened by another soldier, who, with sword uplifted, is urging his horse forward to the attack. He has a voluminous blue and white drapery that gleams against an olive-green and buff flag. On the brownish drab foreground, which is noticeably free from details, is the body of a young man, lying under the belly of the hero's horse, doubled up, head bowed, elbow on his shield, his sword and helmet fallen. A panther head makes a prominent spot on his shoulder. In the middle distance to the right are scenes of fighting; farther back two parties of soldiers meeting on a sort of bridge, and behind this the walls and towers of a city, manned with troops. The lower sky is occupied with gray and cream clouds, rolling under the remains of a faint blue at the zenith. The border shows a ground that shades from a warm chocolate to pale yellow, on which appears a repeat of aeanthus scrolls, mostly blue and cream, interspersed with crimson, white and pale yellow tulips, roses and dianthus. In the centre of the right side is a peacock, balanced on the left by a golden pheasant.

Height, 12 feet 6 inches; width, 12 feet 10 inches.

Early Sixteenth Century. The centre of the panel is occupied by a warrior in blue scale-corset, who seems to be pleading on behalf of three prisoners, one with his hands bound in front, who stand in a row with a spearman at each end. His arguments are addressed to the general, who stands at the left, slightly leaning on a spear, his right hand planted on his hip. His body is enased in a dull gold corselet with tabs, over a blue undergarment, while a drapery of cream and drab, striped with blue, hangs from his shoulders. Behind him sits a woman with her arm round a standing child, a blue water jar, decorated with an interlace of cords, lying on the ground beside her. A little distance off, in the rear, appears a bodyguard of spearmen, waiting by the general's horse. The foreground is sprinkled with flowering plants of Gothic design. The background shows a sloping landscape, interspersed with shrubbery, executed in cream and tones of bluish-green, and having a central mass of trees. On the right of this is a vista of tents, with groups of soldiers scattered among them, while on the left are two men, apparently civilians, in animated conversation, soldiers appearing near them. In both the lower corners of the border sits a red-haired and bearded man, playing on a lyre, at whose feet are a stag, a monkey and a wolf. In the centre of each side is a canopy supported on four columns. It frames a landscape scene, in which a girl is skipping forward with flowers in her hand. Above this, on each side, appears a trellis, which supports three children and trophies of leaves and apples and pears. The top and bottom borders involve a profusion of foliage and fruit and a repeat of looped drapery, which is held up by children in pairs, carrying cornucopias. The central feature in each case represents a hemicycle pergola, within which is a female figure playing on a lyre in front of a woman, who sits beside a stand that contains tulips and lilies.

Height, 11 feet 7 inches; width, 17 feet 3 inches.
